PUBLIC TRANSPORT ON LAND AND SEA

Stockholm is growing – and as it does, so does the load on all of the county's traffic systems – which means the public transport system must grow too. The County Council's long-term planning work shows the way ahead for both its operations and tomorrow's public transport system on land and sea.

€ 3.5 billion will be invested in public transport over the next five years. Concrete examples of these investments include the expansion of Stockholm's metro network, new tramlines, light railway systems, and investments in existing commuter train services.

The county council is working towards ambitious environmental goals. All of Stockholm's 2,100 public transport network buses are currently powered by renewable fuels such as biogas, bioethanol and biodiesel. The Public Transport Administration is now also examining the introduction of electric bus services, along with a wide range of alternative technologies and business cases.

The Administration is also focusing on gradually increasing the use of renewable fuels in the waterborne system of commuter boats and the Waxholmsbolaget archipelago boats.
